THINGS TO KNOW

The search for a nominee continues.

Twelve Democratic presidential candidates will take the stage in Westerville, Ohio, on Tuesday in the party's fourth debate of the nominating contest for the November 2020 U.S. election.

It will be the largest scrum on a debate stage yet for the Democrats, as they try to find a nominee to take on President Donald Trump, a Republican.

Most notably, it will be the first debate held since the U.S. House of Representatives launched an impeachment inquiry into Trump's attempts to encourage the government of Ukraine to interfere in the election. The probe likely will be a recurring subject throughout the evening.

BIDEN ON BIDEN

In the now-documented phone call between Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy that lies at the heart of the impeachment probe, Trump suggested that Zelenskyy should investigate Joe Biden and his son, Hunter. The younger Biden sat on the board of a Ukrainian gas company, Burisma, while his father was vice president under President Barack Obama.

Candidates will likely take aim at Trump, and each other.

GETTY IMAGES

Trump has repeatedly suggested, without offering evidence, that Joe Biden pressed Ukraine to back off from a corruption investigation of the company.

Biden has tried to use Trump's allegations to his political advantage, arguing Trump's persistent focus on him means Trump fears a face-off in the general election next year.

The debate will mark the first time that Biden will be on stage with his Democratic rivals since the call came to light.

BIDEN VS. WARREN

The bigger question is whether any other contender will seek to press Biden on the matter or assert that there were ethical issues with Hunter Biden's arrangement.

The candidate to watch will be U.S. Senator Elizabeth Warren, who has made combating Washington cronyism a hallmark of her presidential campaign.

Warren has risen in the polls to the point where she is now considered a front-runner for the nomination along with Biden. She has largely stayed away from criticizing her fellow Democrats. Is this where she twists the knife?

BERNIE'S BACK

The debate will mark the first official public appearance for U.S. Senator Bernie Sanders since he suffered a heart attack at a campaign stop in Las Vegas on Oct. 1.

Sanders, 78, is the oldest of the 19 candidates seeking the Democratic nomination, and the incident has raised questions about his age and his capacity to serve as president.

Sanders maintains he is ready to resume his campaign and will continue full-bore.

"It will be important for him to relay that and to show it, not only with his words but with his actions, that he is feeling great," an aide said.

A NEW URGENCY

As a topic, U.S. foreign policy has largely been regulated to the second half of previous debates, behind such flashpoints as healthcare and immigration.

Not so this time, predicted Brad Bannon, a longtime Democratic pollster in Washington who works with labor unions and Democratic issue groups.

"The Turkish attack on the Kurds in Syria will prompt a discussion of foreign policy that has got little attention in the previous debates," Bannon said.

The crisis in Syria — unfolding after Trump's decision to withdraw U.S. troops who had been fighting alongside Kurdish forces against Islamic State militants — likely will spark an examination of Trump's track record on the world stage.

THE NEW GUY

Tuesday's debate will be the first for California billionaire Tom Steyer, who entered the presidential race this summer.

Steyer was ahead of the curve on Trump's impeachment, having invested millions advocating for it since Trump took office.

WHAT ABOUT ME?

For the remainder of the Democratic field behind Biden, Warren and Sanders, impeachment has come at an inopportune time.

The constant media coverage of the probe has effectively wiped the lesser presidential hopefuls right off of the TV screen and out of news stories.

For the rest of the still-sprawling field polling in the low single digits, impeachment could serve as a knockout blow as they struggle to gain attention ahead of the nominating contests that begin in February. REUTERS

Trump prepares to drop sanctions on Turkey

2 President Donald Trump's administration is set to impose economic sanctions on Ankara, potentially as early as this week, for its incursion into northern Syria, one of the few levers the United States still has over NATO-ally Turkey. Using the U.S. military to stop the Turkish offensive on U.S.-allied Kurdish fighters was never an option, defense officials have said, and Trump asked the Pentagon on Sunday to begin a "deliberate" withdrawal of all U.S. troops from northern Syria. After Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Friday that Trump had authorized "very powerful" new sanctions targeting Turkey, the administration appeared ready to start making good on Trump's threat to obliterate Turkey's economy. On Sunday, Trump said he was listening to Congress, where Republicans and Democrats are pushing aggressively for sanctions action. REUTERS

Family of U.K. teen killed in crash plead with U.S.

3 The parents of a British teenager killed in a car crash involving a U.S. diplomat's wife vowed on Monday to keep fighting until they get justice for their son after the American woman returned to the United States following the accident. Charlotte Charles and Tim Dunn spoke to media in New York during a visit intended put pressure on the Trump administration to have Anne Sacoolas sent back to face U.K. investigators. "She needs to just do the right thing and just come back and face what she's done," said Charles, her voice breaking with emotion. Mock video of Trump killing journalists slammed

4 The White House Correspondents' Association has condemned a mock video, shown at a gathering of U.S. President Donald Trump's supporters at one of his Florida resorts, that depicts him slaughtering members of the news media and political adversaries. News of the video was first reported by the New York Times, which said it obtained it from someone who attended the three-day gathering last week at Trump National Doral Miami and took a cellphone video of it. Parts of the video were posted on YouTube in 2018, the Times said. It shows Trump's head superimposed on the body of a man wearing a pinstriped suit and opening fire with a handgun inside the "Church of Fake News." The parishioners' are identified by the logos of news organizations or the faces of political opponents and critics of the president. REUTERS son that can make those decisions. I don't lobby for those things."

He made his comments in his weekly radio appearance on WEEI's "The Greg Hill Show."

Tom Brady said Monday he won't ask Rob Gronkowski to end his retirement to return to the New England Patriots.

"I love that guy. I'm so happy that he's enjoying his time, his life," Brady said of Gronkowski, who caught 79 touchdown passes at tight end for the Patriots. "He seems to really be doing a lot of great things. He knows how I feel about him. I want what's best for him. He's the only per-Gronkowski, 30, hasn't filed his retirement papers yet, and team owner Robert Kraft told NFL Network last week that he can "pray and hope" that Gronkowski will decide to play again. The Patriots have just two tight ends on the roster.

Gronkowski recently joined FOX Sports as an analyst, and he told the network that while he's physically prepared to play, he isn't mentally prepared.

Brady said he understands.

"I have a great relationship with him. He's given a hell of a lot to our team already over a long period of time, and I think people should be very appreciative for what he's brought to the team and what he's brought to the region," the quarterback said. "I think he's just a very special guy. He's at a different phase of his life."

Gronkowski played for the Patriots from 2010-18, and his 79 touchdown receptions are the most all-time by a New England receiver. His 7,861 receiving yards are second all-time for the Patriots behind Stanley Morgan (10,352). REUTERS

Is there anything more terrifying than when your teacher alerts your class that there will be a big exam in the not so distant future? Even if there is ample time to study between now and the exact exam date, the process of cramming all of the necessary information into your brain can be easier said than done with everything else going on in your life. Here are five easy ways to get your brain into fighting shape before a big exam.

Study groups

Sometimes it's easier to do things in a group setting rather than on your own. By getting a few of your friends in your class to tackle the material and bounce questions back and forth with, you will be able to not only get a deeper understanding of the subject matter but also rest assured that you are on the right track. By having others re-confirm you are moving in the right direction by checking your work and thought processes, you will be prepared to head into the exam as a team rather than just one individual. Plus, you can hang with your friends as you schedule meetups before the big day. Who says all of this can't be fun?

Do the work out loud

Now if you need to do some studying on your own away from the group, make sure that while you are doing the reading or pulling apart equations that you do so out loud. According to a study published in 2017 by the University of Waterloo on memory, researchers found that by adding the steps of reading information out loud and hearing yourself speak, newer subjects are more easily ingrained into your brain in a more substantial way than simply reading in silence.

Use rewards as motivation

Sometimes, the act of simply cracking open your books to get down to business can be half of the battle. But if you give yourself tiny rewards to help you cover ground along the way, you can have a positive association with studying rather than treating it like some form of torture. Reward yourself with snacks along the way or even take yourself out to do something fun once your study session is over. Furthermore, if you do well on your exam you should go big and celebrate all of your hard work.

Go off book

Just because you are using your textbooks to study subjects throughout history doesn't mean that those bland books are the only places you will be able to get that information. With resources like streaming platforms, it's easier than ever to find fun and interesting documentaries and podcasts that can engage you in the material in ways that will help you in your studies. Plus, you can trick your brain into thinking that you are watching or listening to something in your own time.

Exercise before your exam

Many people will tell you that meditation will help you to get rid of any anxiety you may have before taking a big exam. But one of the best things you can do before taking an exam is to take a long walk to get your blood flowing. Not only will this help to get your pre-test jitters out, but by getting the blood in your body flowing you will be much more alert and focused on the questions and can adapt to things that you may have not planned for.

Natasha Bedingfield talks first album in nine years and using positivity as a motivation.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Singer-songwriter Natasha Bedingfield knows how to make an audience feel good. In fact, the UK native's sole mission with her music is to produce incredibly catchy hits that uplift people's spirits. Bedingfield demonstrated her raw talent and optimistic capabilities with smash hits "These Words," "Pocketful of Sunshine" and the unofficial theme song of 2006, "Unwritten." But the songstress is hungry for more and she uses her audience's experiences with her music as motivation to keep the feel-good train rolling. Bedingfield sat down with Metro to talk about the release of her first album in nine years, her new tour and why her greatest inspiration comes from all of her fans.

"Roll with Me" is your first album out in nine years. Why was now the right time for its release?

I don't think it's ever a bad thing for a singer/songwriter to take breaks between albums — I think that it shows the thoughtfulness. I feel really excited about this music, I just love how it flows, and I think that it still has that catchiness that I'm known for but also a lot of depth and growth musically. It's really incredible production-wise. I met Linda Perry years ago, and we had just an amazing flow right from the start, we kind of brought something different out in each other. Linda started a label and I was the first artist she called. She knew I left my label and when she asked if I wanted to make a record I immediately said "Hell yeah."

Do you feel as though your inspirations for songwriting have changed over time the longer you've been in the industry?

Having performed so many live shows, I'm influenced by my listener. I'm always thinking in my head about what I want the experience to be like for someone who is listening to my music. That's influenced me more than anything — I've heard so many stories about how my songs have touched people in different ways. Sometimes a song can help someone get through a really hard time, and yet that very same song can be just like a complete fun let-go kind of song for someone else. I love that music can do that.

Since we're talking about songs, I have to ask how it feels to have "Unwritten" remixed for "The Hills" reboot on MTV?

It was such a wonderful experience to write a song like that — that song is beyond me, it's beyond the show and it's its own kind of thing now. I love singing it on stage, everyone always sings it at the top of their lungs and that truly makes me so happy. So when I knew they were re-launching, I approached them and basically said wait, you better be using my song! We had a meeting with them and we decided to do a remix of it — it's ten years later and it has a new feel with everyone in the show being grown-up, so it was suited for the new version.

Now jumping to your tour, what do you love the most about being able to perform live for audiences?

I just love how songs change depending on who you sing them for. When you sing live there's this interaction that actually influences the music, and I love that. It's fascinating, it's exciting and when I go on stage I lose all self-consciousness and I feel very swept up in the music. There really is no other high like that. I'm very sensitive to energy, and I can really read the energy in a room. So I like to send out positivity, which is one of the things I actually love about one of my inspirations, Motown music — it doesn't have to be a positive song but you still always feel this kind of power and uplifting energy. But different parts of the country also have different types of flavor for sure.

Overall, what do you hope fans take away from attending one of your concerts?

I want people to put whatever it is that is on their mind on hold and just let themselves be swept up in the experience. It's going to be intimate, it's going to be real and most importantly it's going to be fun.

SPORTS

It's early, but the Bruins look poised to defend their Eastern Conference crown.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Bruins collectively took their Advil this summer, apparently, as there is absolutely no hangover to be seen this season following last June's crushing Stanley Cup Finals defeat against the St. Louis Blues.

The B's not only crushed their brutal road trip to open the 2019-20 campaign, winning three of four out west, but they also have looked dominant in their first two games back in Boston.

The Bruins crushed the Ducks, 4-2 in a Columbus Day matinee at the Garden yesterday – that coming on the heels of a 3-0 blanking of the Devils on Saturday.

Heading into the season, one of the biggest questions for the Bruins was whether or not David Pastrnak could raise his game to another level. He led the team in goals last season with 38, but that number was far off the NHL lead as players like Alex Ovechkin, Leon Draisaitl and John Tavares hovered around the 50-goal mark.

Pastrnak vaulted himself near the top of the NHL early-season leaderboard on Monday as he registered four goals, giving him six on the season thus far.

Pastrnak's hat trick plus-one was the first time a Bruins player posted four goals in one game since Patrice Bergeron pulled it off against Carolina on Jan. 6, 2018.

Brad Marchand also continued his hot start to the 2019-20 season Monday as he had a pair of assists, pushing his points total to nine on the year.

The Bruins have today and tomorrow off before hosting the Tampa Bay Lightning on Thursday (7 p.m., NESN) in a huge early-season showdown at the Garden. Tampa Bay, which was unceremoniously bounced in the first round of the playoffs this past spring following a record-setting regular season, was most people's Stanley Cup pick heading into this season. Tampa Bay is just 2-2-1 to start the season.
